I. COURSE AIMS

Internal medicine, as a part of clinical medicine, consists of a number of so called “conservative” branches which, unlike the surgical branches in which surgical way of treatment is adopted, use non-surgical methods, mostly pharmacotherapy. In this internal group of subjects, except for internal medicine, there are also incorporated and infectology, neurology and dermatology in the restricted sense. Internal medicine itself today consists of a series of sub specialties which are mostly defined clinically according to the prevailing interest for the certain organic system diseases, as for example (arranged in alphabetical order): endocrinology and metabolism, gastroenterology, hematology, cardiology, nephrology, pulmonology etc.

Apart from these sub specialties, classified according to the clinical approach, today there are also and interdisciplinary branches as clinical pharmacology, clinical toxicology, clinical immunology, but also infectology and especially oncology, which focus mainly on either therapy issues in different clinical branches or on pathogenesis and diagnostic procedures of a disease, i.e. of a subject field. This textbook, hopefully, reflects on this successfully. Development of these branches is best shown in larger clinical centers in which the experts of interdisciplinary fields are very successful within the framework of teamwork with the other clinical physicians, often as advisors.

Similar example is that today the patients in emergency cases are treated in special departments (of intensive care), especially in seldom emergency cases with several organic systems affected, in which the experts with diagnostic and therapy skills are being profiled.

Although medicine today is based on scientific evidence (especially clinical medicine, i.e. evidence based medicine), nevertheless it is also in a large part an art, a line of work that is often adopted through experience, one’s judging and intuition (these are all euphemisms for probability). Clinical praxis is much more than just applying the scientific principles to the biological aberrations. In clinic, which is all this about, often there is no unambiguous answer; often it is not possible to get all the information, often the “principle of insecurity “ is present in time of reaching decisions and work. In every aspect, the interest for the patient and his well being is present. Additionally, medicine is not just an applied biology, it presupposes many psychological, sociological, anthropological and, especially lately, economic aspects.

- To learn the meaningful approach to the case history, physical examination and clinical way of making a decision in neurology
- To encourage the independent gaining of knowledge
- To learn how to present patients verbally
- To prepare concise and clear findings in internal medicine
- To learn how to carry out the how to differentiate normal findings and disturbances in internal medicine
- To learn how to localize the site of lesion in the internal organs which could cause the patient's symptoms and signs
- To learn how to recognize more frequent disturbances in internal medicine
- To learn how to formulate the differential diagnosis
- To learn how to order and interpret findings of usual examinations which are being used in diagnostics of disturbances in internal medicine
- To understand the principles of treatment of more frequent diseases in internal medicine
